Content
Summary	The 47 letters comprising Fay section 1 were deposited in the Marshall Library by Charles Ryle Fay in April 1938, his covering letter to Sraffa clearly stating that they were in return for a volume of Hume's work, which had presumably been given to Fay by Sraffa.
Summary	They were originally catalogued within the library's miscellaneous letters collection, but have now been separated and re-numbered in alphabetical sequence by writer. Fay selected these items for presentation as being from famous economists of his youth. How many other letters he destroyed and at what date is unknown. It appears that no other substantial collection of his papers remains.
Summary	Many of the letters are short and the subject matter often the purely practical arrangements of economics examiners and lectures at Cambridge. However, even these can shed light on the differing factions within the department. A considerable number concern suggested reading matter when Fay was a research scholar at the London School of Economics.
Summary	The ten letters from Alfred Marshall are the longest series. These reveal his involvement with Fay's research on European co-operation and also Fay's assistance with the 6th edition of Marshall's 'Principles'. Five were thought of sufficient interest to be published in John K. Whitaker's edition of Marshall's correspondence.
Summary	The collection of 20 maps forming Fay section 2 was presented by Fay in 1944, according to a hand-written label found with them. They were presumably used as visual aids in his undergraduate lectures. In the absence of a complete numbering sequence they have been listed in date order within sections for Great Britain, Canada (maps of specific areas last) and the World.
Summary	The single postcard in section 3, from Fay to Professor John Habbakuk, was added to the collection in 1998.
Summary	BIOGRAPHY Charles Ryle Fay was born on 13 Jan 1884, the oldest son of Charles and Emily Fay. He attended the Merchant Taylors' School, Crosby, Lancashire before gaining a place at King's College, Cambridge to read History. He gained Firsts in Parts I and II 1904-5. He was a student of Alfred Marshall's and an undergraduate contemporary of Maynard Keynes at King's.
Summary	Fay was subsequently elected to the Shaw Studentship, a research scholarship at the London School of Economics. This was provided by Mrs George Bernard Shaw (nee Charlotte Payne Townsend) and was worth £100 a year for two years. He was also granted £60 from the Worts Fund of Cambridge University in June 1906 towards his travel expenses, on condition he reported the results of his investigations in a form that might be published by the Senate. His research topic was the Co-operative movement in Europe, culminating in the publication in 1908 of his book 'Co-operation at Home and Abroad'. While still a research student he began to lecture for the Cambridge Economics Tripos, and was elected a Fellow of Christ's College in 1908.
Summary	With an interruption for military service in The Buffs and Machine Gun Corps from 1915-18, Fay remained active in teaching economic history in Cambridge until 1921, when he was appointed Professor of Economic History at Toronto University, Canada. In 1931 he returned to Cambridge as Reader in Economic History, a position he held until retirement.
Summary	Fay's teaching centred on English Economic History, particularly of the nineteenth century. However, in 1937, for example, he taught a course on the Economic Development of the British East Indies from 1869-1929. He was a prolific author, his books including "Life and Labour in the 19th century" and "Great Britain from Adam Smith to the Present Day".
Summary	Fay married Alice Quendryth Hartland and had three sons. After his retirement he lived in Belfast, where he died 19 Nov 1961.

Summary	Recommends beginning by going through [J. and T.C.] Williams on 'Real Property'. Then Harbach's book just translated and [Gilbert] Slater's 'Enclosures'. But almost a virgin field. 15th century history of leases [word underlined] still most obscure. See what [James Edwin] Thorold Rogers says on effect of Statute of Frauds.
Summary	After 1700 law is pretty clear, only need facts on distribution of ownership and tenancy, but 1400-1700 law is still most obscure.
Summary	Wishes him success in difficult task.

Summary	Will be examining for History Tripos in May term, hopes to see Fay then. Learned from [Goldsworthy Lowes] Dickinson that nothing can be settled until new professor is appointed and fact "that some of you got subventions from Marshall - which presumably will cease - complicates matters." May be unable to lecture for Economics Tripos at all. Asks what Fay intends to lecture on for History Tripos.
Summary	Asks Fay's confidential views on Oscar [Browning]'s lectures on political science lately. Has been conducting some rather awkward negotiations with him. Reddaway is hostile to Browning. What did Fay think of his lectures in 1904? "Confidential", underlined, in upper left corner of first page.

Summary	Will not communicate Fay's views on Oscar [Browning] to anyone. They have been useful.
Summary	Economics lecture plans hung up pending further information. Agrees with Fay's and [Herbert Somerton] Foxwell's views about English Economic History in first year. At Leeds Clapham introduced everyone to economics via a term's modern economic history.
Summary	Not worth while discussing future of Economic Theory until they know who will be professor. Not enthusiastic about lecturing on it, has "neither great love nor great capacity for the Margins and the diagrams. Still I am an economist and Green - tho' a friend of mine - isn't." Refers to various opinions offered by colleagues, including Fay. Would prefer to lecture on some part or whole of Economic and General History. In any case he will not interfere with Fay continuing to give English Economic History 1800-1900.
Summary	His own chief ambition (highly confidential) is to write a big history of that very period but would rather postpone teaching it or teach some allied question than interfere with Fay.
Summary	Asks Fay to keep him informed. [Goldsworthy Lowes] Dickinson and [Arthur Cecil] Pigou both have such illegible writing that he prefers Fay.

Summary	[John Harold] Clapham has passed on to him Fay's letter about Part I lectures. Clapham, Pigou and Meredith agree that it would not overburden the Part I men to take course in British Constitution. Thinks they had better stick to Board's decision. Keynes is giving a 2 term's course to freshers next year on money etc. Worth Fay considering whether his general course might be compressed into 2 terms, though this may be neither possible nor desirable.
Summary	Presumes British Constitution will be included in the exam next year. Think's Meredith's suggestion be adopted that British Constitution questions go in History papers, so number of papers not increased. Gives alternative and asks Fay's views.

Summary	Glad to hear from Fay again. Mentions problems with his sight.
Summary	Discusses London Money Market and its complexities, which make it difficult to write about. Spalding's 'The London Money Market' Pitmans, 1922 is first that ever printed tolerable account of it. Foxwell also referred to Merchant bankers in his 'Essays on Current Finance' 1919.
Summary	In 1923 Foxwell gave 15 lectures on it in Milan at invitation of Commercial University. "The revival of Italy under Mussolini is amazing. She is a formidable competitor in the textile and engineering trades now."
Summary	Refers Fay to 'Banker's Almanac' for list of merchant bankers.
Summary	Has rashly undertaken to edit 'Bibliography of Economic and Social History' for the British Academy which is likely to fill his time for the rest of his life.

Summary	Thanks Fay for sending him 'The Right to Work' which he has read with interest. "How wonderfully little I know about those extraordinary people of '48!" Hopes this is only prolegomenon to some more.
Summary	[Arthur Cecil] Pigou seriously ill with what may be appendicitis.
Summary	Post-script: Pigou much better, no longer serious.
Free field	Appears that 'The Right to Work' may have been an article on The Chartist petition of 1848. The copy sent to J.M.Keynes has not been located in his papers at King's College, Cambridge. Fay's 'Life and Labour in the Nineteenth Century' (1920) has a chapter on Chartism.

Summary	Discusses Fay's plans for his Fellowship dissertation, including means of financing his research and possible inhibiting factors about using Cambridge money from Worts studentship for research which might eventually be published by LSE as Shaw scholar. Also discusses Fay's possible future lecturing responsibilities on nineteenth century British economic history in Cambridge for 1907-8 onwards. Concerned that Fay may not have enough time to devote to them.

Summary	Fay will be getting letter from Mavor's friend Greshenko asking for information about barley. He is wealthy landowner interested in agrarian improvement and experimentation. He wants to introduce better kind of barley than now grown in south central Russia, and one suitable for beer making. Told Mavor about new kind of hard Russian wheat, Mavor will ask him to send sample to Fay. If Fay could send small quantity of barley seed for experiment this winter, it would be great advantage. Greshenko will pay expenses involved. Postscript: asks Fay to send him any recently published papers.

Summary	Public announcement of new lectureship in economic history will probably be made next week. Meanwhile, Nicholson making preliminary inquiries. Thinks post offers good opening. University making changes in Arts Degree and "eventually no doubt economic history will be well represented." May institute a B.Sc. in Economics similar to that in London. Subject of University education for those training for higher posts in business is attracting much attention here and lectureships in Mercantile Law and Statistics have been founded partly to meet this demand. Economic History post would be concerned with general history course as well as Economics. Classes in economic history likely to start small but expand. Election is in hands of University Court, but Nicholson has no doubt that opinions he has been collecting from various authorities (e.g. Dr. [William] Cunningham and others) will have due weight.

Summary	Has been thinking about Girdler's [lectureship]. Best if Fay sent in his name as candidate. General Board might not appoint him on grounds that he already holds teaching appointment, but for him to refrain from standing would be to make gift of both remuneration and title to somebody else. Thinks Fay is obvious person to have title and he could always surrender part of the remuneration if required.
Summary	Postscript; Fay should only send in his name after the notice asking for names has been published.

Summary	Thanks Fay for sending him the English version of his article. Praises Fay and states political and sporting activities are both aspects of an indivisible life. Quotes F.H. Bradley 'Whatever you know it is all one'.
Free field	This appears to be [Arthur Cecil] Pigou writing in Italian as 'Professor Bigione' of Milan. See Fay 1/1, where Fay refers to "the Prof's effort in Italian". A native Italian speaker confirms that the text is ungrammatical and unlikely to be work of an Italian. The reason for the 'academic joke' is unknown.

Summary	Has been working on Townshend papers [Charles, 2nd son of 3rd Viscount Townshend] at Dalkeith. Lady Dalkeith [Caroline, wife of Francis Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, who died 1750] lived at Adderbury, near Banbury, Oxfordshire and improved the estate about 1760-6. Fay wishes to visit the estate, so can Habbakuk ascertain whether it still exists. He is coming to Oxford in July for a course.
