Summary

This section begins with the texts of Marshall's four early philosophical essays read at meetings of the Grote Club in Cambridge. Following these in a chronological sequence are chapters from his abandoned early work on foreign trade and a folder of 1930's correspondence about them and their use.

Summary

There follow a paper on profit-sharing, drafts on trade disputes, the plight of book sellers and local taxation and various sections of his memorandum on 'the Fiscal Problem'.

Summary

Next are a number of draft sections, manuscript and typescript, which were most probably intended for his proposed volume on 'National Industry and Trade'. The rest of section six comprises annotated copies of Marshall's printed works and pamphlets by Marshall and by others (annotated by Marshall).

| Title | The Law of Parsimony |
| Content | |
| Summary | Paper read by Marshall to meeting of Grote Club held in his St John's College rooms about March 1867 (according to Groenewegen, p.111, the meeting after that of 5 March). Probably first of 4 surviving philosophical essays by Marshall. Based largely on Sir William Hamilton's rule for the interpretation of consciousness, 'Parsimony viz that no fact be assumed as a fact of consciousness but what is ultimate and simple'. Also cites Darwin's 'The Origin of Species..', and works by Mill, Bain, Mansel and Ferrier. |

| Title | Ferrier's Proposition I |
| Content | |
| Summary | Paper read by Marshall to meeting of 'the Club' [Grote Club] on a Friday (see ff.26-7 of Marshall's attached note). |
| Summary | Deals with self-consciousness as a feature of man as distinguished from brutes. Ferrier's first proposition was that 'along with whatever any intelligence knows, it must, as the ground or condition of its knowledge, have some cognizance of itself'. |
| Summary | Folios 25-34 are a note on this paper which Marshall read before the paper he gave at the next meeting, after receiving objections to his views. the note mentions the Law of Parcimony. |

| Summary | |
| Title | Chapter VI. Taxes on foreign trade for the purposes of Revenue |
| Content | |
| Summary | Fair copy of draft chapter VI of first part of Marshall's unpublished early work on foreign trade. |
| Summary | This chapter broadly covers direct effects on a country's economy of import and export taxes, potential of partial monopoly producers to raise revenue, effects of taxes on imports. Cites Adam Smith's 4th principle of taxation. Marshall believes taxes on imports are to the benefit of the country concerned. Cites cases of varying tax on sugar cane imports and effects on consumers of such 'discriminating duties'. However taxes are to the detriment of consumers as they cause a loss of satisfaction greater than the equivalent of the revenue raised. Discusses bounties, feels those on exports have attracted more attention than they merit. |
| Free field | The first 5 folios of Chapter VII were formerly with this chapter. They have been moved into Marshall 6/7. Notes for chapter VI are at back of Marshall 6/7. |
| Free field | Pencil annotation on title sheet, which is for Chapters VI and VII, 'Have read these. Not [illegible, may be 'needed' or 'wanted'] AM Apr 1923'. Marshall has left statistics on Customs duties (f.37) blank. Very few pencil annotations on this chapter. |

| Summary | Fair copy of incomplete first chapter of second part of Marshall's unpublished early work on foreign trade. This part of the work 'is occupied with the erection of an apparatus fitted for the quantitative treatment of certain problems which are directly suggested by the actual conditions of foreign trade; and which may be included under the title "the pure theory of foreign trade". Marshall argues that the results of the theory are capable of being modified so as to apply to other portions of economic doctrine. Defines his 'pure theory of domestic values' as the basis for that of international values. |

| Summary | Enclosure to Marshall 6/11/2. Reading 'Memorials of Alfred Marshall' this morning he noticed a sentence in a letter of Marshall to [Henry Hardinge] Cunynghame about an early unpublished chapter on import and export duties and bounties. If this chapter exists in Marshall's papers it would be a good idea to publish it as a complement to LSE's reprint of Marshall's 'Pure Theory' chapters as published by Sidgwick. There would certainly be a demand for it in print and from context of Alfred Marshall's letter he would have no objection to it being printed. Should he write to Mary Marshall about this. At LSE they always tell students to read every word of Marshall's 'Principles'. |

| Summary | Marshall's manuscripts on foreign trade are in the Marshall Library and he will be happy to make arrangements for Robbins to use them. He will look them out at the end of the vacation. Recalls that they will require editing and careful deciphering. Supposes either Robbins or Fay are in touch with Mrs Marshall, so he has not consulted her about this. |

| Summary | It is clear that the manuscript which Robbins wants is not in the Marshall Library, there is nothing that could be printed as it stands. There are some interesting bits that could be extracted from the mass. He would like to tackle it but is too busy for a couple of years. Thinks it best to send whole bundle to Robbins, but to say that printing of a coherent chapter cannot be done. Does not think LSE should be publishing Marshall material. |

| Summary | It is clear that the manuscript which Robbins wants is not in the Marshall Library, but he is sending whole bundle on international trade on deposit to British Library of Political and Economic Science for a month, so that Robbins can see for himself. Will he let him know what he thinks when he has read them. Thinks chapter he wanted was probably incorporated in 'Money Credit and Commerce' and then manuscript destroyed. |

| Summary | |
| Title | |
| Content | |
| Summary | Paper on profit-sharing, of which the first page is missing. Begins 'If purchasers and workers agree that labour including managers shall be hired at outside price, and goods sold at outside price, and capital (by whomever supplied) shall be paid at outside price, then the profits should be divided between the two in proportion to the services they have severally rendered'. |
| Summary | Discusses situations when either purchasers or workers should receive larger share of profits. Questions whether management should receive higher percentage than others involved in production, giving pros and cons. Mentions Miss [Beatrice] Potter's views, probably as expressed in her book 'The Co-operative movement' (1891). Outlines [David F.] Schloss's argument against profit sharing [Schloss was the author of the 1894 Report to the Board of Trade on Profit Sharing. C.7458. It is not known if he was also the author of the 1890-1 Report on the same subject]. |
| Summary | Marshall answers Schloss's arguments. Thinks there is no argument against it if everyone willing to work the system. It could also be supplemented by system of gain sharing. Discusses relationship between gain and profit sharing. Each man's earnings should correspond to the good which he does to the concern in which he works. |
| Summary | Marshall thinks profit sharing or cooperative schemes should not have a clause against Trade Union membership, but that strikes against good employers are to be condemned. Strikes in public utilities, e.g. gasworks, might have to be prohibited by law. Approves of [Joseph Shield] Nicholson's work on profit sharing. |

| Content | |
| Summary | Memorandum by Marshall originally proposed 'as part of the Introduction to the Report' [probably 5th and Final Report C.7421] of the Royal Commission on Labour 1891-94. Marshall wished to consider the wider implications of trade unions as this was not particularly in the remit of the Commission. The main text is in Mary Marshall's hand, red marginal headings by Alfred, plus 1 page introduction and amendments. Includes 2 small printed sections from the terms of reference of the Commission. |
| Free field | Annotation on first page of text that was to be used in 'IV III on influence of technique on continuity' [reading uncertain], possibly Marshall's last book on economic progress. |
| Free field | 3 dated annotations by Marshall on attached blue sheet show he was considering publishing parts in projected book of essays, but by Oct 1923 realised he was unlikely to make a new study of Trade Unions and that this text was outdated. |

| Title | Ye Boke Sellers |
| Content | |
| Summary | Marshall's unpublished draft letter to 'The Times' on the net book system. Debate in the 'Times' began on 9 Nov and there was a leading article on the topic on 15 Nov. |
| Summary | Marshall believes booksellers have fallen on evil days. 'Let us then consider how far the misfortunes of the booksellers can be remedied without great cost; and how far, like those of the hand-weavers when power looms came in to vogue, can be properly met only by industrial readjustment'. Outlines changes affecting booksellers: great increase in numbers of books published, borrowing of periodicals from libraries and specialization. Predicts booksellers sending out sample books for customers to select from and the decline of their advisory role. Advocates a system of book depots. |
| Summary | Marshall regards net book agreement as retrograde. The cash price of a book is now same as credit, system is unfair to cash buyers and authors, favouring the seller. The system should be elastic and moderate. Criticizes Editor of 'Bookseller'. |

| Summary | |
| Title | Division of function between central and local authorities |
| Content | |
| Summary | Two draft replies by Marshall to written question 7 of Royal Commission on Local Taxation, 'Is it possible to frame any criterion whereby the purposes for which taxation should be raised locally can be distinguished from those for which taxation should be raised by the central Government?' May be drafts for part of Marshall's Memorandum [1899 C.9528]. Marshall finds it difficult to lay down principles for the division of central and local duties, cites example of Switzerland. In general thinks local authorities should have the maximum freedom and responsibility possible, thinks subventions from the central treasury for local purposes are an evil in themselves, but may be necessary for new developments in education. |
| Summary | Second draft numbered 7 expresses similar views. Public expenditure for local purposes should be controlled by local authorities with as little central interference as possible. In practice the division between matters of central and local concern is not easily drawn. Believes local powers in England should be continually extended. Second draft incomplete. |

| Title | Preface |
| Content | |
| Summary | Incomplete draft preface to Marshall's 1903 version of his memorandum on 'the Fiscal Problem', prepared when it was intended to print the first version. |
| Summary | Preface states that Marshall usually avoids being drawn into political conflict, even when it contains a large element of economics. Outlines the dangers of doing so to the 'impartial sincerity' of the student. The present issue of free-trade is different in the extent to which both sides have adopted distinctly economic statements as part of the basis of their positions. The 'Economic Notes' issued by the Prime Minister [Arthur James Balfour] are also a new and welcome departure, but they ignore some vital considerations. |
| Summary | 'Economic utterances' of the late Colonial Secretary [Joseph Chamberlain] and the Reform League, of which he is President, are of a different kind. Some of the economic propositions he has laid down as a basis for his policy are invalid. That is why academic economists issued public letter of August 1903, which was much misunderstood. Marshall has a passion 'for Anglo Saxon ideals'. |
